Athens under a cloud of pollution known as nefos, which hovers over the city for much of the year.

Air in Athens Called Worst in W. Europe

By Marvine Howe New York Times Service

ATHENS - Athenians have grown increasingly worried about a brown cloud of pollutants they call nefor that hovers over the capital for much of the year. Now their fears have been confirmed: Athens has won the dubious bonor of being proclaimed Western Europe's most polluted city.

The European Parliament's environmental committee issued its conclusion last month on the basis of long research. The report said the Western European cities most affected by pollution were Athens, Nice and Milan, where statistics show that the average dweller's life span has been sbornened and pulmonary abilities

The mayor of Athens, Dimitris Beis, acknowledges that his main problems are pollution, traffic and overcrowding, but insists that the Socialist government is taking measures to resolve them.

"The Ministry of Environment has a five-year program to clean up the city and get rid of the nefos," Mr. Beis said recently in an interview in his office in the City Hall, situated in a highly polluted area of downtown Athens. "I won't promise that Athens will be as clean as it was 30 years ago, but there should be a substantial improvement."

But the Panhellenic Center of Environmental Studies, which serves as a kind of citizens' conscience, contends that the situation is steadily deteriorating and that the steps taken so far have been largely ineffectual.

"I don't want to be a prophet of doom," said Panayotis Christo-doulakis, founder and president of the center. But he cautioned that if within five years the authorities have not taken the necessary measures, Athens could share the fate of such cities as London, where hundreds of citizens have died in periods of had smog, Most people agree about the basic cause of Athens's environmental ills: the urban explosion in the past three decades. The modern capital sprawling around the ancient Acropolis was planned as a city for about 150,000 people; today it has spread out all over the Attica basin connecting the port of Piracus and the northern suburhs and has 4,130,000 inhabitants, or more than 40 percent of Greece's total population, and most of the country's industry and traffic.

Team May Have Found New Particle Linked to Subatomic Reactions

By Walter Sullivan New York Times Service

NEW YORK - An international team of 126 researchers at CERN, the European Laboratory for Particle Physics near Geneva, appears to have detected the last of the three particles that theorists believe transmit the so-called weak force in subatomic reactions.

Only one particle of the new type has been observed so far. Known as the Z-zero, it would be Dr. Rubbia's group reported dethe most massive ever detected, having roughly 100 times the mass of the proton, which forms the nucleus of hydrogen atoms.

The observation, made several days ago, was described in a talk Monday at Princeton University by Dr. Carlo Rubbia of Harvard University, a leader of the experimental group. When reached by phone Wednesday, Dr. Rubbia said the observed particle was "a candidate" but "we would like to see a few more events" before mak-

The finding, he added, "helongs to the great moments of physics in the 20th century." He said the odds were 3 to 1 that the observed particle is the Z-zero but added that someone like Dr. Rubbia could not he expected to stake his reputation

Discovery of the Z-zero, so called because its electric charge is zero, would complete the roster of particles carrying the weak force, which is the force responsible for certain forms of radioactive decay and plays a key role in the reactions generating energy in the core Physicists have long believed that such forces are carried by vector" particles that pass almost instantaneously between the transmitter of the force and its recipient. It has been well established, for example, that light waves carry the electromagnetic force.

The suspected carriers of the weak force - the W and Z particles - are known as intermediate vector bosons, but until recently had not been observed. The northern part of the divided island has been under Turkish Army control for nearly nine years.

The assembly also called for meaningful negotiations between the Greek and Turkish Cypnot communities, which have been holding talks on the future of the island since the mid-1970s.

The vote on the resolution, sponsored by a group of nonaligned friendly to Cyprus, was 103 to 5, with 20 abstentions.

The resolution won slightly more support than a similar proposal adopted in 1979, the last time the Cyprus question was debated in the assembly. The vote then was 99 to 5, with 35 abstentions.

Turkey, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Somalia and Malaysia voted against the resolution Friday.

A new element in the resolution was a paragraph welcoming UN Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar's intention to renew his personal interest in the Cyprus dispute and asking him to take "such actions or initiatives as he may consider appropriate." President Spyros Kyprianou of Cyprus was reported in April to have secured the backing of the Greek Socialist government of Andreas Papandreou in seeking a new UN peace plan for the island.

The old proposal, made in 1981, called for a federation-style settle-ment, with 25 percent to 30 percent of the territory going to the Turk-ish Cypriot minority and 70 per-cent to 75 percent to the Greek Cypriot majority.

Named Foreign Chief Agent Orange Suit to Go to Trial

UNIONDALE, New York (NYT) - A federal district judge has agreed that a suit against chemical companies by Vietnam veterans who say their medical problems were caused by the defoliant Agent Orange should go to trial.

Judge George C. Pratt Jr. said Thursday a trial was merited because there was enough evidence that the Dow Chemical Co. and four smaller chemical manufacturers — Thompson Hayward Co., Univoyal Inc., Dismond Shamrock Corp. and the Monsanto Co. - might have withheld crucial information on the dangers of Agent Orange. The defoliant was used to deprive the enemy of cover in the jungles of Vietnam.
Victor John Yannacone Jr., an attorney for 20,000 veterans, their widows and children in the suit, said: "We won an important victory today. If the judge had dismissed us, we would have been finished." In the past 30 years the U.S. Supreme Court has consistently ruled that soldiers do not have the right to sue the government. If the suit against the chemical companies had been dismissed, Mr. Yannacone said, it would have ended legal claims involving Agent Orange.

Andrei Sakharov is probably the greatest living scientist to be treated as a public enemy in his own country. It was a scandal when be was seized by security police and cruelly banished in 1980 to the closed city of Gorki for the crime of defending human rights. The scandal has now been deepened by a new Soviet leader's refusal to allow Mr. Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner, to leave the country. All that has changed for the Sakharovs is many secrets to be allowed to emigrate.

The pretext is specious. Not since 1968 has the man who developed the Soviet hydrogen bomh had access to secret information. Besides, if betrayal were his purpose he has had ample opportunity to pass secrets to Western colleagues. Even to suggest any such treason is a slander, as his jailers well know.

The Sakharovs have endured scorn, isolation and hunger with unyielding dignity. If the Kremlin believed what it now says, there would have been no signals about his being permitted to depart. Plainly the Politburo was divided about a simple act of generosity and good propaganda, and the man at the head of the table turns out to be not so tall after all.

Leashing Technology

The Reagan administration, or at least part of it, wants to tighten up the rules on exports of high technology to keep the Russians from getting it. The same Reagan administration, or at least part of it, wants to expand high-technology exports to strengthen the economy and industries crucial to national security. One view prevails at the Defense Department, the presumably, will be the referee.

The Defense Department already reviews export licenses for certain types of goods being shipped to the Soviet bloc and China. But it wants a veto over a wider list of sales. including those to noncommunist countries as well. As a practical matter the reviews would mean delays, much uncertainty and rising incenoves for foreign buyers to find sources of supply elsewhere. How would the benefits balance against this disruption of commerce?

The congressional Office of Technology Assessment has published a sensible paper. Unquestionably the Soviets are able to exploit U.S. technology — bought, borrowed or stolen. But much leakage is inevitable in an open society. The OTA observes that "it is rare to find examples of technologies obtained from the West which the U.S.S.R. could not have produced itself, albeit with delays."

It is a fair generalization to say that embar-goes of technology can work fairly well when they are limited in scope and when they are supported by a consensus among the industrial countries. That consensus is currently ad-ministered in Paris through the Coordinating Committee for Multilateral Export Controls. When a government pushes beyond that con-sensus it invites a divisive quarrel that is very likely to end in a costly fiasco.

Two examples are President Carter's grain embargo and President Reagan's campaign against the Soviet gas pipeline. The first brought a vehement reaction from American farmers, and, after Mr. Carter lost the election, Mr. Reagan reversed him. As for Mr. Reagan's attempt to stop building of the pipeline, it led to a blazing row with the West Europeans, the only result of which has been that American manofacturers have lost contracts to their European and Japanese competitors.

If Mr. Reagan wants wider controls on technology leakage, he will have to build support for them out only among U.S. producers but abroad as well. The Defense Department wants to press faster and much further into highly controversial areas. To weigh the wisdom or even the possibility of that, Mr. Reagan might reflect on the way the grain embargo and the pipeline quarrel turned out.

What Chance Accidental Nuclear War?

CAMBRIDGE, Massachusetts — Could nu-clear war begin purely by accident? The assumption is common that ouclear war is likely to come not by decision of rational government leaders but due to mechanical or human accidents. Johnathan Schell, for example, has written that "the machinery of destruction is complete, poised on a hair trigger, waiting for a button' to be 'pushed' by some misguided or deranged human being or for some faulty computer chip to send out the instructions to fire." Is this true? Are the following scenes possible?

The Faulty-Computer-Chip War: Deep inside a multimillion-dollar computer used to process the military intelligence coming from American satellites, a 35-cent computer chip malfunctions. Suddenly the radar screens begin to flash. A thousand Soviet missiles appear to be coming over the horizon. "Oh my God," the radar screen operator says "This is it." In the White House, the president is informed of the warning, now 10 minutes old. "In 20 minutes the missiles will destroy our retaliatory forces, sir," his military aide informs him. As the president leaves the White House for his specially equipped command post airplane, he orders that all land-based missiles be launched immediately.

"I am not going to let our missiles be destroyed on the ground," he says as he climbs aboard the helipcopter. "We'll fight. But the Russians started this war. Let the history books record that fact."

The Strangelove Scenario: Individuals under pressure cannot always withstand the strain. Sometimes they snap.

tackles the commander, wrestling him to the floor. The commander appears startled. Then he smiles, looks up and says, "That missile is going to shoot down a Nazi bomber. I'm teaching those fascists a lesson. Remember Stalingrad!"

Although such imaginative scenarios are often discussed, they are, fortunately, extremely unlikely if not impossible.

The U.S. government has devised numerous precautions to prevent such accidents. Along with more sophisticated and more numerous weapons, more sophisticated and more numerous precautionary policies have been developed. There are four kinds of measures intended to minimize the chances of mauthorized or accidental use that are worth noting.

First is the "two-man rule," which requires parallel actions by two or more individuals at stages in the process of communicating and car-rying out any order to use ouclear weapons. Second is the system of Permissive Actions Links (PALs), including a highly secure coded signal which must be inserted in the weapons.

before they can be used. Third, devices internal to the weapon are designed to ensure that an attempt to bypass the PALs system will disarm the weapon.

Finally, the nuclear warheads themselves are designed to preclude accidental detonation as a result of exposure to heat, blast, or radiation. The Soviets share American concern with unauthorized and accidental nuclear war, and there is reason to believe that they, too, have taken measures to prevent it.

In this light, how credible are the two scenarios outlined above? There have been, it is true, many false alarms in the American outlear artack warning system. Some of them have been traced to such minuscule components as an inexpensive computer chip. But none of these false alerts has even come close to leading to war, because the government has built redundancies into the system, precisely so that no president will ever have to rely on a single computer or radar screen to make such important decisions. For this kind of accident to lead to war, several warning systems of different kinds - for instance, infrared sensors on satellites, and radars on land — would have to fail simultaneously. Even that by itself would be unlikely to cause the president to order an immediate launching of ICBM missiles. His incentives to do so might indeed be small if the missiles were relatively invulnerable and if he had other nuclear systems at sea, not under attack. It is even possible to maintain a policy of not launching missiles in a retaliatory strike until after the damage of the enemy's first strike is assessed.

It is possible that an officer under pressure, could go insane. But an insane American officer could not, in peacetime and by himself, arm and deliver the nuclear weapons under his command. In the submarine case, to give but one example, it would take the simultaneous insanity of a number of American submarine officers for an manthorized American launch to be possible. Given the Soviets' strong propensity for tight political control of their nuclear weapons, there is no reason to believe that the chances of unanthorized Soviet use are any greater.

Thus it is a mistake to believe that a simple accident or an imstable commander could easily lead to a ouclear exchange. In reality, the proba-bilities of such an event are very low.

This should not, however, breed complacency about the prospect of accidental war, for two reasons. First, it is only through continual concern that the likelihood of accidental use of weapons is kept so low. Second, mechanical accidents and human frailties could become increasingly dangerous in times of deep crisis or conventional war, during which time command centers would be threatened or destroyed.

There will continue to be an uneasy balance between the degree of control required to ensure that weapons are not used accidentally and the degree of "usability" required to ensure that they can be used if occided. If it were certain that a weapon could not be used, it would not contribute to deterrence. Nuclear weapons must be usable enough to provide credible deterrence, but not so usable as to invite unintended use.

The Image Reappears In Reverse

WASHINGTON - The dominant talk of Washington these days is about the tremendous infighting within the administration, which the president seems to ignore. It makes for a surprising muror m-. age with Paris. In both capitals the quarrels and struggles for power are essentially between ideologists and pragmatists, the people who think they can make over the world and those who are trying to deal with the problems it presents.
As in a mirror, of course, left and right are reversed. The French ideologists have a socialist vision of the good society. They campaigned on the slogan "change," and they think they received a mandate for a complete overhaul of France.

In fact they did not. They were merely elected to replace a team and a style that had worn out its welcome, just as American ultra-con-servatives are mistaken in thinking they won a mandate to turn the clock back more than half a century. The results, however, make for a remarkably similar disarray under a eadership that seems unable to impose a clear direction. In many ways Presidents Ronald Reagan and Francois Mitterrand are opposites. But they also have a lot in commoo as they try to maintain their cool above the fray that is going on among their advisers and minis

Mr. Mitterrand is a literary man who enjoys rambling, abstract discourse and much prefers swaddling an issue with hours of intellectual exchange to grasping it. Mr. Reagan likes simplicities and prefers a ringing metaphor to concrete decision. Either way, each of them fails to set-tle the argument family enough to force the rest of his team to get on with the job at hand, and the struggle continues in the underbrush to change the boss's mind.

In both countries the fight among those in power is more important; than the way they confront the political opposition, not only because they " have the power but also because the opposition is so confused.

No clear alternative is offered. No individual has emerged to articulate a coherent set of criticisms and a different course. The French constitution and the absolute majority that Mr. Mitterrand's Socialist Party holds in the National Assembly save him from the kind of haggling that holding the line against protection-ism but also rolling back recent pro-tectionist actions as recovery pro-President Reagan has to undertake with a fractious Congress, but he is having a similar kind of trouble inceeds, and hastening preparations for a new round of trade negotiations. side his party and in the streets.

Government supporters blame rightist militants. But in fact the reforms are a reversal of concessions made after the great leftist upproved too costly in both money and educational excellence.

The argument for maintaining a. steady course of leftism on the grounds that it is Mr. Mitterrand's sacred mission, regardless of the con-sequences, is made within the leadership of his party and will probably

It is not charisma, excitement, bold visious new or old that people want any more. Those have proved hollow, ineffective, even dangerous. The grandiose notion of commanding events to shape up to a pre-conceived pattern is undermining the world's painful efforts to recover eco-nomically, and weakening alliances. Drastic change is not only unfeasible in a very complex world, it hurs, too much. People yearn for a renewed sense of reliability, solidity, effectiveness. My hunch is that if a French or American version of West: Germany's late Konrad Adenaner came along with his unwavering slogan of "no experiments," he would be elected easily in either country.

The mirror image indicates that the best campaign platform in either country would be a single word; competence. # Truth in Argentina

When the world notices the Argentine people it is often to deplore their addiction to myths of national destiny. At present, however, a sobered people is seeking the plain truth about the thousands who have "disappeared" in the last seven years of military rule.

Such information about 6,000, perhaps 30,000 missing persons is being withheld by those who know the most, the military authorities. Preparing to yield to civilian rule, they seem more concerned with protecting fellow officers than with protecting the country from

Other Opinion

The day of peaceful protest organized Wednesday against General Pinochet's regime by the powerful confederation of copper miners and supported by other tolerated or clandestine unions was the first initiative of the sort since the coup d'élat of September 1973 which overthrew the Popular Unity govern-ment of Salvador Allende. Such "saucepan concerts" by the middle class during the summer of 1973 foretold the inexorable fall of the Allende government. Today they express re-ship that continues to stiffen repression.

Evidence of rejection has multiplied in the past year. The economic failure of a hyper-liberal "model," advocated and applied by the "Chicago boys" of Milton Friedman, has cost the regime the support of a sorely pressed private sector. Bankrupt small businessmen are joining the ranks of the previously discontented — persons whom the dictatorship disappointed, and democratic opponents of the first bour. Even such an extreme rightist movement as Fatherland and Liberty is bitterly denouncing the military regime.

'Saucepan Concerts' in Chile A Divide in South Africa

The results of South Africa's latest flurry of by-elections show that Prime Minister P.W. Botha has caused a deep and almost cortainly unbridgeable divide in Afrikanerdom. They suggest, however, that he has kept the support of much the largest part of his people. ## About the News Craft and History

WASHINGTON — Almost everybody reads the oewspaper, listens to the radio or watches television to keep up with current events. But outside the media very few people really know how the gathering and communicating of oews works.

There seems to be a notion that the press, whether printed or electronic, is some kind of huge monolith managed by a central authority. In Amer-ica presidents and lesser politicians try to project the impression of the news media as a conspiracy deter-mined to smear men in high places. As a corrective to this misguided view I recommend a small classic, "The News Business," by a couple of veteran professionals, John Chancel-lor of NBC and Walter Mears of The Associated Press. At first glance the slim volume looks like a primer for aspiring young journalists, a compen-dium of "dos and don'ts." But it ought to be read by a wide public for its acute insights into the daily func-doning of the news business.

I wish the authors had chosen a different otle. Journalism may be a business for publishers and advertising agencies, but it is still a craft for the reporters who collect the news.

In other words, the extraordinary technology that oow goes into the production of newspapers and televi-sion shows has not altered the fact that the process begins with a reporter wielding nothing more than a pencil and a notebook.

Mr. Chancellor and Mr. Mears make this plain in their chapter on leads, the opening words of a news story. As they note, wastebaskets are filled to the brim with crumpled paper because reporters are constantly searching for the correct lead.

"Leads are the keynotes, the overtures, the tee shots of newswriting." They set the theme of a story. They can be fair and balanced, but they are always subjective for the simple reason that the reporter selects the elements in an event that he or she regards as cruciai.

Reporters sometimes write it wrong - as in March 1968 when a young wire service reporter covering Richard Nixon's campaign in the New Hampshire primary wrote that Mr. Nixon had a "secret plan" to end the war in Vietnam.

The dispatch hit television screens that evening and grabbed headlines across the United States the next morning, and it entered the history books. But Mr. Nixon had no plan, secret or otherwise, and he never said he did. He merely pledged to end the COMISO, Sicily - U.S. military and civilian personnel are beginning to arrive in this remote southern Sicilian town where cruise mis-siles are scheduled to be deployed beginning late this year, and the authorities believe the Mafia may be coming with them.

A U.S. official in Italy said the first group of Americans has arrived in Comiso, where 112 nuclear missiles and 4,300 Americans are to be based by 1987.

The Italian authorities, meanwhile, have voiced concern that, because of the base and its potential economic effects, underworld figures are buying into an area where there has been no known Mafia presence.

Salvatore Catalano, the mayor of Comiso, has asked the head of Italy's anti-Mafia police, Emanuele De Francesco, to investigate re-ports that Mafia "families" have bought 8,645 acres (3,500 hectares) of land in the Acate and Gela areas around Comiso.

Linuted Press Inter VATICAN CITY - Pope John Paul II on Friday accepted the resignation of an American Roman Catholic nun who defied a Vatican order to step down as director of Michigan's welfare agency because it funds abortions for the poor.

Agnes Mary Mansour resigned from the Sisters of Mercy religious order Wednesday, saying she considered working for the poor more important then remaining a nun. Her resignation "was immediately accepted by the Holy See," the Vatican said.

The welfare agency she heads dispenses government funds for poor women seeking abortions and other medical assistance.

VICTOR, THE ADVANCED 16-BIT

FIRST, WE CHANGED OUR NAME FROM SIRIUS TO VICTOR. THEN, WE ADDED SOFTWARE THAT TURNS VICTOR INTO AN EVEN MORE VERSATILE SYSTEM.

LEADERSHIP. Sirius unique combination of hardware and software made it Europe's leading 16-bit microcomputer.

> Now, in its new global role, Sirius has acquired the Victor name and worldwide service organization. But we haven't forgotten what we learned as Sirius.

THE SOFTWARE EQUATION. Without software, even the best computer is principally useful as an expensive boat anchor.

That's why Sirius, and now Victor, encourages the development of useable and useful software for business, industry, and the professions. Today. our software library contains hundreds of highly productive programs written for use in all major European languages.

THE VERSATILE COMPUTER.

With available software and the Victor printer. the advanced 16-bit Victor computer can become a complete office system with unmatched performance in its price range.

THE POWERFUL COMPUTER. No computer in its price range offers you the features and performance of the Victor computer system.

Start with memory. The standard Victor offers 128 Kilobytes of memory and full 1.2 megabytes of disk storage.

Then, keyboards. Victor offers keyboards in all major European languages.

Now, the computer itself. Victor is a third generation 16-bit microcomputer with power once imaginable only in computers costing many multiples of the Victor price. And here's the paradox: the more powerful a computer is, the easier it can be to use.

THE FRIENDLY COMPUTER. With Victor hardware and software, you'll probably be using it the first moment you own it.

Start with programs like word processing and electronic management tools. Add terminal programs which allow you to communicate with mainframe computers. Network Victor computers to share programs, data and accessories such as printers. The Victor system is built to grow with you. It's actually so friendly that it can talk to you, or record your voice digitally.

TRY IT YOURSELF. There are Victor computer dealers worldwide. They'll be happy to give you a complete, hands-on demonstration of Victor systems and software.

When you compare price and performance, we think you'll agree, nothing beats the Victor system.

I ONDON — The two-day sale of works of art from the Middle Ages and the Renaissance that were formerly part of Lord Astor's collection at Hever Castle is one of those landmarks that leave their "stamp on the art market.

In it was sold - for £28,990 ($45,000) - one of the most beau-

The Virgin and : .Child, seated within a tabernacle, 17.5 centimeters (7 inches) high, supported by slender columns, display the mastery of the Ile de France scriptors at rendering volume and movement, which was at its highest around 1300 when this . piece, once part of a polyptych, was executed. The Hever Castle sale also included the finest suit of . Italian armor of the 16th century seen in the market in years - in deed one of the finest of its style surviving anywhere. That reached the record price ever paid for any work of art other than a painting -£1,925,000.

Industrial-Policy Advocates Try To Find a Home in Economics

TEW YORK - Does the economics discipline really know what ails he economy and how to fix it? One sign that economics either may not have all the answers - or that people think that it does not - is the attention being paid to proposals for a federal policy to aid industry. The proposals start from the premise that traditional economics has failed to explain or to solve U.S. economic problems, and that more attention must be paid to policies that will compensate for weaknesses in U.S. business and labor institutions. But while these ideas have attracted much attention, they have not been embraced by mainstream economists. For one thing, the new theories do not fit within the context of modern economic analysis; they tend to dwell on institutional behavior, an area that the economics profession largely left behind 20 or 30 years ago. For another, the industrial-policy proposals have out yet been subjected to the analytical tests that economists require before they are willing to believe that a theory holds water.

Because the ideas fall

outside of traditional

economics, is there a way to subject them to the tests to which many economic theories are held?

Many economists concede that they have had a difficult time diagnosing and curing U.S. economic ills. But for the most part, they still maintain that economics does have

"There may be a grain of truth in what the industrial-policy advocates are saying," said Robert Solow, a professor of economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. But at best, it is a grain, because there are too many other obvious economic explanations which contribute to explaining the current economie malaise."

Mr. Reich, a leading proponent of industrial policy, studied economics as an undergraduate at Dartmouth and as a graduate student at Oxford before going to Yale Law School and working as chief of policy analysis at the Federal Trade Commission. He explained, however, that his frame e: of reference was really politics, law and institutions, rather than economics. per se. Recause the industrial-policy ideas fall outside of traditional economics, is there any way to subject them to the rigorous tests for validity to which many economie theories are held? Mr. Reich rightfully pointed out that much of what concerned him would be difficult to fit into the mold of standard econometric analysis.

"When it comes to messy politics and real world institutions, much of that does not lend itself to formal economic modeling," he said.

More Rigorous Analysis

Nonetheless, even he agreed that further, more rigorous analysis may be useful, although he was willing to leave that to others. What kinds of testing might be appropriate is an open question. William Baumol, a professor of economics at Princeton and New York Universities, noted that certain types of tests may be less appropriate than

"Our analytical methods can be bent and stretched to fit almost anything, but sometimes it is not worth the effort," he said. "You might get an equation that tells you, for example, that a man, M, is walking a dog, D. on a leash, L. But that does not necessarily help." Even so, Mr. Baumol noted that a range of research tools - statistics, case studies, controlled experiments - are available, and one or another might be

First Tentative Conclusions:

He said: "If I were doing this as a Ph.D. candidate, my first chapter would review the literature, and point out that all the productivity studies say that economists cannot explain more than 50 percent of the slow-down in productivity growth. My second chapter would explain my hypotheses. My third chapter would present my data — the growth in the layers of management in corporations, the number of paper mergers, and so forth. My fourth chapter would present all my regression analyses.

And the fifth chapter would present the first tentative conclusions.

"Bot I didn't want to do it that way," Mr. Reich said. "I love writing and I would just have found it tedious. It seems to me terribly important that these ideas get out. And since my frame of reference has never been the economics community, I never felt a need to put it in those terms." the sky by Oct. 1, operating as "a new airline with a lot of the old traditions," according to the com-pany's chairman, Howard Putnam.

Nearly two stocks rose for every one that fell on the New York Stock Exchange.

Big Board volume fell to 83.11 million shares from 84.06 million Thursday, in the slowest trading since April 12, when 80.51 million shares changed hands.

Prices were also higher in active trading of American Stock Extechnology issues battered earlier this week were showing strength with buying by institutional bar-gain bunters who found their prices attractive. But the rest of the list was flat. The moderate trading indicated that many investors were waiting for the Federal Reserve's report after the market closed on the nation's money supply. A surprising $1.4-billion increase in last week's report dashed hopes that the Federal Reserve System would soon cut its discount rate.

The weakness in the market Wednesday and Thursday was re-garded by many analysts as part of normal correction in the bull market that has seen the Dow average soer about 440 points since the rally began in mid-August. Wayne Nordberg, chairman of investment policy committee of Prescot, Ball & Turben, said that if the situation in Lebanon further deteriorated, "the Dow could drop to the 1,050 to 1,100 level before resuming its upward trend."

Mr. Nordberg noted that such a temporary decline "is needed in order to purge the market of its spec-

U.S. Auto Firms change issues. Analysis said some of the highGo Back to Basics

By John Holusha New York Times Service

FLINT, Michigan — Against the backdrop of the Buick Motor Division's Factory No. 3 here, a noisy, grimy workplace that has been turning out automobile springs since 1918, a modern video-display terminal on the shop floor seems strangely out of place.

Ask a question about its function, however, and Herman Bach-man, a middle-aged worker in coveralls standing nearby, quickly demonstrates one of the ways in which Buick and other U.S. auto makers are moving to wed sophisti-cated new technology to the task of building cars.

Mr. Bachman, who operates a machine that tests every spring produced at Buick 3, explains that data gathered by his machine is computer analyzed in different ways and displayed on the video screen. If the display on the moni-tor at Mr. Bachman's work station shows that parts are beginning to doilt out of specification, he said,

Factory 3 is just one part of Buick's sprawling manufacturing complex in Flint, just as Buick is only a part of General Motors and the U.S. automobile industry. Yet the installation of computerized testing machinery in this aging plant, and Mr. Bachman's command of it, are indications of the sweeping changes now under way in the once complacent U.S. auto

Until about 10 years ago, U.S. auto makers were the unchallenged masters of their home market. ## Swiss Banks Plan To Back Merger Of Watch Firms

ZURICH - Swiss banks will hack the merger of the country's two leading watchmaking groups with 600 millioo Swiss francs ($295 million) in the higgest rescue plan in the history of Swiss industry. banking sources said Friday.

Allgemeine Schweizerische Uhrenindustrie, or Asuag, announced Thursday night plans to combine with Ste Suisse pour L'Industrie Horlogère, or SSIH, to form the world's second-largest watchmaking concern after Japan's Sciko Group.

Both groups have had sizable losses in recent years, and only two years ago SSIH had to be saved from bankruptcy by 300 million francs of aid from the banks.

Asuag markets Rado and Longines watches while SSIH produces Omega and Tissot. Neither group bas been able to cope with worldwide over-production, tough competition from producers in the Far East and recession.

The 600 million frames is likely to consist of new capital, write-offs debts and the opening of oew lines of credit, the sources said. Swiss banks already hold most of the share capital of both groups.

Banks involved, which include Swiss Bank Corp., Union Bank of Switzerland and Swiss Volksbank, have agreed to the rescue plan in principle, but some have yet to formally confirm their approval, the sources said. Credit Suisse, Swit-

Asuag expects to report that its 1982 loss was about the same as the 44-million-frane deficit in 1981. SSIH, which had losses of 162 million francs in 1980 and 38 million francs in 1981, said in a shareholders' letter last Fehruary that in 1982 it also had "a considerable

The banks decided on the merger because it was elear that Asuag could not continue without new capital, and because the 300 millico francs paid out two years ago had not been enough to bring SSIH back to profit, the sources said.

It was boped that the merger would result in more rational use of the two groups' manufacturing, research and distribution resources, they added.

Switzerland's volume share of the world market in watches has dropped from 30 percent in 1970 to about 9 percent today. Itt terms of value, it still has nearly a third of the market because it concentrates on expensive models.

During the past decade, world production of watches bas more than doubled, resulting in buge stocks of unsold watches accumulating in warehouses. Hong Kong now makes about half all watches sold, followed closely by Japan.

Peter Gross, the banker put io to head the board of SSIH two years ago, said io a newspaper article that Switzerland's supremacy in expensive watches was under threat unless it could maintain independent production of parts and preserve the reputation of the trademark "Swiss-made."

The Swiss watch industry prospered as small companies in the first half of the century, but grouped together later in the face Japanese competition. This loose amalgamation increased bu-reaucracy and led to wasteful use of resources, without yielding prof-

Styling remains important, of course, and Ford, for one, is counting on its new aerodynamic look to give it a clear distinction over competing models. But the difference, Detroit executives say, is that actually producing the vehicle is receiving more attention these days.

This re-emphasis on engineering production equipment and manu-facturing techniques is an ack-nowledgement that the advantage of the Japanese auto companies bes not in design or marketing, but on the factory floor. Indeed, many modern Japanese autos were styled outside Japan and the major Japanese auto companies all have design studios in California.

In a way, the U.S. anto industry is returning to its roots, to the days Detroit to counter Japan's formithat grew up over the years—one dable challenge remains to be seen that made engineering subservient meanwhile, U.S. auto executives to styling—is also being discardare using a practice reputed to be a ed, Detroit executives say. #### Iraq Proposes to Pay Off Part Of Its Delt to France in Oil

PARIS (AF) — Foreign Minister Tarek Aziz of Iraq proposed in an interview poblished Friday that his country should pay off in crude oil shipments a part of its 13-billion-franc ($1.76-billion) debt to France. Mr. Aziz told the daily oewspaper Le Monde that Iraq proposed sending 2.5 million to 3.5 million tons (about 17.5 million to 24.5 million barrels) of crude to France during the current year, "which would enable Iraq to hnnor 90 percent of its debt to France in 1983 and pay off the remainder in 1984." He said that unless some such arrangement was made, Iraq would be able to pay only 40 percent of its debt this year. He said Iraq has made similar swap arrangements with British, West German and Japanese oil

Official French sources said such an arrangement was conceivable "within the limits of France's oil needs and its commitments to other oilexporting countries."

U.S. Car Sales Increase 5.2%

DETROIT (AP) — Early May car sales rose 5.2 percent from the period a year earlier at the four major domestic automakers, the companies announced Friday.

The four said they delivered 165,713 autos between May 1-10, compared with 157,577 in the year-earlier period.

General Motors was the only one to show a decline, 1.6 percent, and a spokesman attributed it to strong sales in the year-earlier period. Chrysler reported a 41.6 percent jump, while Ford's sales improved 1.5 percent and American Motors sales were up an estimated 104 percent.

Chrysler Backs Off From Plan

WASHINGTON (NYT) - Chrysler Corp., responding to the public outery that greeted its effort to persuade the U.S. government to forgo about a $220-million stock-price profit for rescuing the company from bankruptcy, said it is withdrawing its request.

The auto maker said Thursday that it no longer seeks to cancel 14. million warrants it issued in 1980 that give the government the right to buy 9 percent of Chrysler stock at about half the price at which the stock market values such a stake.

Chrysler noted, however, that the question of what to do about the warrants - rights to buy shares at $13 each until 1990 - would have in be dealt with at some unspecified date and it did not rule out asking for

Car Plant to Have New Staff

WASHINGTON (LAT) - Former workers at the closed General Motors plant in Fremont, California, will be the "primary source" for re-cruitment and the United Auto Workers union is likely to represent workers when the plant is reopened as a joint venture by General Motors and Toyota, William J. Usery Jr., a special adviser for the project, said.

But Mr. Usery, a former U.S. secretary of labor, emphasized Thursday that "this is a new venture with a new work force." Neither the seniority ranking of the former GM workers nor the job classifications and work rules under the ald union contract with GM would be recognized when hiring gets under way, probably later this year, he said.

De Larosière Renamed IMF Chief

WASHINGTON (WP) - The managing director of the International Monetary Fund, Jacques de Larosière, has been reappointed for a second five-year term, the IMF has announced. Mr. De Larosière's first term expires on June 16

The fund said Thursday that he was reappointed by the Board of Executive Directors of the fund, which has 146 member nations. The IMF has played a crucial role in the Third World debt crisis of the last eight months, as it has nechestrated financial-rescue packages for debtor nations in trouble and pushed commercial banks to keep on lending to needy countries. Mr. De Larosière has impressed government officials here and elsewhere with his handling of the crisis and his reappointment was widely expected.

The 53-year-old-Frenchman was the director of the French Treasury for four years before coming to the IMF.

Fourth, there is the phenomenoo that even "more than citizens of most collectivized socictics, Japanese are dominated by a sense of responsibility to the various groups to which they belong - their country, their company and so on. Paradox-ically, this helps to account for their drive and effi-

Fifth, there is the Japanese abhorrence of "direct personal confrootation" and their corollary tendency almost always to "operate by consensus." Sixth, there is their remarkable ability to accept change, which Christopher attributes to the primacy of their commitment to "the well-being of their tribe rather than to ideology or religion." And finally, there is their basic standoffishness, despite their "readiness to adopt foreign ideas, institutions and techniques." In their heart of hearts, they feel, as most great civilizations inevitably do. "superior to the rest of the world,"

Still, argues Christopher, for all the paradoxes and perplexities that Japan offers to the United States, the consequences of American failure to un-derstand Japan could prove threatening to world order, such as it is, not to speak of the U.S.'s own national well-being. Already, he says, Americans have provoked and irritated Japan with their condescending attitude, with such thoughtless acts as the re-establishment of relations with China without first consulting Japan, and with the growing demands of Americans that Japan should, for one thing, assume a greater share of military-defense spending and, for another, reduce its trade surplus with the United States by cutting back on the goods it sells through the U.S. domestic markets.

These demands are essentially uojust, Christopher insists, because "the fact is that in both 1980 and 1981 the United States global balance-of-payments position was substantially better than that of Japan," and because in return for supplying Japan with arms, Japan provides the United States with air and naval bases without which the United States would not be able "to offer any meaningful assistance to our Asian allies or any serious deterent to our enemies in the region."

But aside from being unjust, the American atti-tude toward Japan is downright dangerous, he maintains. For, according to Christopher, it is in the nature of the Japanese characte. to put up with to let it out in paroxysms of violence. Even rational retaliation, such as Japan's possible decision to align itself with China instead of the United States, would not be a comforting prospect. And given Ja-pan's present mind-set, such an eventuality is not

The Baseline Burns originally were Bleacher Bums at the San Antonio minor league baseball games. But when the team's general manager, John Begzos, joined the Spurs, he invited the Burns to follow him.

There are 120 members and almost that many on a waiting list to join. A review board interviews prospective members. Anyone who misses more than 20 percent of the games each season loses his membership card. Members in good standing receive discounted tickets and invitations to the group's monthly barbecue and beer bust. Their most famous member at

Hughes's Huge Plane Goes on Public View

United Press International LONG BEACH, California -The Spruce Goose, the colossal wood airplane Howard Hughes built, siew nace and hid for three decades, was unveiled Thursday in a spectacular new roost, next to another transportation relic, the ocean liner Queen Mary.

The gleaming white craft, still the world's largest airplane, with a wing span looger than a football field and a tail the height of an eight-story building, was show-cased to the world's largest clearspan dome that also features exhibits of the reclusive magnate who built the plane during World War II, it will be opened to the public Saturday as part of an air show representing more than 70 years of

"That's their problem."

"Hello, Dealer Smith. How's the feed and fertilizer business?"

"Just awful. Ever since the government started giving away free grain, oobody wants to buy any seed or fertilizer from me. I'm about to go bankrupt."

"Sorry to hear it. Can't you get some of that PIK money going around?

That's only for farmers who don't raise any crops. We should get some too, because if it wasn't for us there wouldn't be any surplus grain in the government bins." How would the government do

"Pay us for the grain and fertiliz-er the farmers don't use to plant anything."
"That could get expensive."

Well, if they don't do some-thing soon there won't be seed or fertilizer stores left when the farmers have to go back to planting again. There won't be any tractor dealers either." "What do you do all day long

David Bowie: Rock 'n' Role

By Richard Harrington

NEW YORK — David Bowie Washington Post Service has the tensile build of a javelin, folded oow on the edge of a chair in a suite at the Carlyle Hotel. Dream-handsome, he is warm, effusive, a sane lad light futurism and the bizarre, androgynous, ambisexual persona of his musical past — Ziggy Star-dust, Aladdin Sane, the Thin White Duke — and the restrictive roles of his late-blooming acting career — the emotionally abused alien in "The Man Who Fell to Earth." Bertolt Brecht's mur-derous "Baal." the grotesque John Merrick in "The Elephant the blood-drinking Blay-Мап." lock in "The Hunger." Bowie, always the transformer and the synthesist of disparate styles, combined rock and theater and emerged with triumphant spectacle. In the spotlight, Bowie has always appeared bizarre, a flamboyant freak, a spot that kept changing its leopards. The pupil of his left eye, damaged in a boyhood accident, is permanently dilated, giving the perfect features a disconcerting twist. Offstage and offscreen however, he is Brideshead revisited, or a soft-featured Peter O'Toole. The stylish British schoolboy haircut, the sharply tailored clothes, the easy grace of moneyed power and the fragile responsibility of fame all coalesce comfortably in Bowie's lithe yet Earth on 747s, hidden behind imnowerful frame. As he slides into the comfort of middle age — he is 36 and has lived enough for two — Bowie may also be sliding into the comfort of less aggressive art. His shadows no longer precede him, and now Bowie seems less otherworldly than upperworldly. "I suspect t won't ever be quite as radically disturbing in the more obscure [facets] of buman endeavor again, he says in a mellifluous voice haunted by cigarettes and recent rehearsals. think there will be an element of positivism behind my work which has oever been apparent before. Whether that's boring and predictable, that's up to the receiver

This may be the most visible and upbeat period of Bowie's 16-year career — in "The Hunger," he costars opposite Catherine Deneuve and Susan Sarandon and he has an important film, Nagisa Oshima's "Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence," which was just shown at the Cannes film festival (see page 6 for Thomas Quinn Curtiss's evaluation). "Let's Dance," Bowie's first new mooths away from the decadem album in three years, has spawned a hit single. He's rehearsing for his first world tour in five years. In Sweden, 70,000 tickets disappeared in one hour. A single London concert drew a quarter of a milion mail arders. In the United States, Bowie has oever been a great commercial success, certainly not in relation to his influence. He has been sustained less by hits than by myths, inexorably living up to the appra-isal of the guitarist Mick Ronson: "Bowie has 10 become a legend — that's the only way he can last."

The singer laughs at that sug-estion. He admits to "a great understanding of how overblown rock artists' charismas are."

Bowie's forte was rock 'n' role, reinventing himself. He moved from blues to mime to pseudopop to folk to glam-rock to pre-punk to blue-eyed funk. Bored, he would retire, reform, revamp. He wasn't just a fashion plate, he was the whole setting. And if the world was a stage, Bowie played out each act in a new location -London, Los Angeles, Berlin, New York, Geneva. He was the cosmopolitan star who fell to penetrable, but always fascinating, masks. Even the name was a mask; born David Jones, he changed it to Bowie to avoid being confused with Davy Jones of the Mnokees.

"I was always very solitary, insular, especially as a teen-ager," Bowie says. "I put a shell around myself, felt very uneasy express-ing my emotions. I was very Eng-lish in those ways — I had a rein oo my emotions, was very easily flustered, tight-lipped, I guess. When I did start expressing myself, it came out with such an explosion that it sent me right over the top, I guess it's taken all this time to find a balance,"

Bowie, who loved blues and early rock 'o' roll, may have found his greatest inspiration in the silent art of the mime Lindsay Kemp, with whom he studied and worked in the early '60s. "Lindsay was a cornerstone of what I was doing in terms of what is a stage, where does the stage extend to, what is a man oo the stage, the same way a painter uses paint. For me rock was a material. it was a medium. I was taught in form and structure that the arts ate your statement."

The result was a combination of rock urgency and uneasy listening that often confused. "Space Oddity," his 1969 hit, was an tale of alienation in which an astronaut looking down on Earth disconnects his communications links and disappears into space; British television used it in its

for renewal. "I tend to gravitate to the areas of the world that reflect my emo-tional makeup at any given time." Bowie says. "I spent so long in Berlin in my recuperation period

- the city doesn't recognize stars. I was tense and fractured and split in two pieces — so's Berlin. The high amphetamine-cocaine period was Los Angeles. It reflected the high power intensity of being a celebrity.

"A lot of what I did and said in the armed was the greet and

[in those years] was the anger and frustration, and the enthusiasm, of being young. I look back on it, and I'm glad I went through both the lows and highs. I think that I will not now radically change from what I am today I can ever see myself dropping back into what I used to be. I've had all these formal lessons, for good or worse, and from them I think I've learned an awful lot and I think it's helped me in terms of my son."

Zowie, born 11 years ago, is oow Joey and the anchor in his father's life. Bowie, a single parent since a 1977 divorce, points to his son as the level, the inspiration, the motivation for many central changes in his life. "I wasn't with him too much before, because I was on the road all the time. Developing that father-son relationship over the last five or six years has just changed me all around — I can't say it any other way. I had to learn how to express myself so that he could feel freedom with me, so that I didn't become some sort of Victorian fa-ther, which I could quite easily have done. There's nothing that he can possibly do that he can't come and ask me about. I never thought I'd ever be at that age or that stage where I'd say, 'Ah, you'll be sorry!' "

He's curious about andience reaction on this tour, since it'll be Bowie up on the stage, not Ziggy or nther altered egos.

When I first started doing characterizations, presenting different acts with every tour, it was a challenge and unorthodox and a risk. But it got to a point where it was no longer a risk — people would expect me to change radically. This tour is a risk."

Bowie's tour includes Frankfurt, May 20; Munich, May 21; Lyons, France, May 24; Frejus, France, May 26; the U.S. Festival at San Bernardino, California, May 30; London, Wembley, June 2-4; Bir-mingham, June 5-6; Paris, June 8; Gothenburg, Sweden, June 11; Es-British television used it in its because it had the same tensions sen, West Germany, June 14-15; coverage of the the United and problems and I felt I could Bad Segeberg, West Germany, States's Apollo missions, obviously missing the point.

Frank Rakcki, a Polish-born fruit grower who lives in England, has been left £1 million (about $1.56) million) by the American tobacco-heiress Elsie Tritton. Tritton, a New Yorker, left the bulk of her $6-million estate to her grandchildren when she died last February in her 90s, the Daily Express said. Balicki, executor of the will, was left a quarter share and said he will use it to buy the 200-acre (81-hee tare) fruit farm he has managed for 22 years. He said taxes will take about 75 percent of his bequest.

Tritton met Balicki, then a young: naval officer, when she opened he Godmersham Park mansion ocar Canterbury, Kent, to allied service men during World War II, "We would go there to rest and recover before going back to fight," Balicki said. He returned after the war to work on the estate. Now 64, Balicki said be and his family often stayed with Trittoo and her second husband, Robert, at the mansion.
